

MATCH THE FLOWERS WITH THEIR NAMES

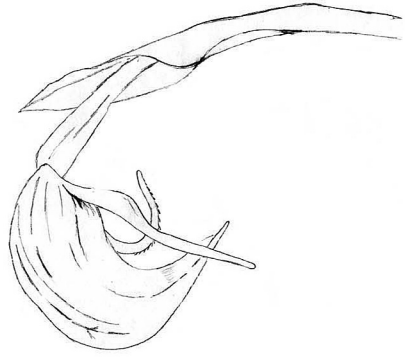

South Australia has hundreds of terrestrial orchids, some of which are rare and in danger of extinction and others which are not. They come in many different shapes and sizes. Their names are just as varied as their appearances, having both a botanical and common name. Can you match the names with the flowers? When you find them write both their names on the lines below the flower.

Flowers: September to October

Flowers: September to December

Flowers: June to October

So the next time you are out in the bush, have a look and see if you can spot some orchids. It might not be one of these, it might be another type for these are just one of many.

See www.nossa.org.au for more about Native Orchids of South Australia